OSHA’s Whistleblower Protection Program

Presented by Michael Mabee,
Supervisory Investigator, U.S. Department of Labor

OSHA administers the whistleblower protection provisions of twenty-one whistleblower protection statutes which prohibit any person from discharging or, in any manner, retaliating against any employee because the employee has exercised rights under the OSH Act. Rights afforded by the OSH Act include employee participation in safety and health activities, such as complaining to OSHA and seeking an OSHA inspection, participating in an OSHA inspection, participating or testifying in any proceeding related to an OSHA inspection, and reporting a work-related injury, illness, or fatality.

Michael Mabee, a Supervisory Investigator with OSHA’s Whistleblower Protection Program, will discuss whistleblower complaints: What they are, how OSHA investigates them, and what employers and employees need to know about these statutes.

The Safety Committee will meet immediately after the Roundtable.
